

What parents need to know about group chats

Currently, group chatting is most popular among Millennials. Data from the USA, for example, reports that – whether they're using WhatsApp, Snapchat, Facebook Messenger or any other platform – almost half (44%) of that 18–34 age bracket take part in at least one collective online conversation every day.

This is relevant because, of course, the schoolchildren of today are the 18–34s of tomorrow. Just like the current crop, online group communication will facilitate their blossoming social lives and expanding friendship networks. Our #WakeUpWednesday guide will help you to prepare young people for participating in online group chats safely and compassionately.
